ARIZONA'S PLAYGROUND

Robert P. McCulloch captured the world's attention in 1967 when he purchased the London Bridge and relocated it from England to the stunning Colorado River. Since the city's official incorporation in 1978, the community has continued to thrive on the spirit of possibility and innovation and recently earned $2 million as one of America's Best Communities.

As the new home of the London Bridge, Lake Havasu City attracts more than 1 million visitors annually with 60 miles of uninterrupted navigable waterways, 300 annual events, 300 days of sunshine, 400 miles of river coastline and 1,800 miles of off-road trails.

Here, you can explore the desert by foot, mountain bike or off-road vehicle. You can discover secret lake coves in a kayak or in a high-performance luxury boat, lounge in the Bridgewater Channel or camp under gazing stars.

In Lake Havasu City, white sandy beaches mingle with breathtaking red-rock mountains and breezy palm trees to give you an experience unique to Arizona.

Welcome to your playground.

HELPFUL HINTS

The bright Arizona sun, cloudless skies and dry air make for an enjoyable day relaxing and basking on the beach. Make sure to bring plenty of water and sunscreen to the beach to ensure you enjoy your entire visit to Lake Havasu City!

Bassmaster ranks Lake Havasu as one of the top 10 bass fishing lakes in the Western U.S. Fishing is popular all year long, and anglers can haul in black large and smallmouth bass, striper, panfish and catfish. Cast your line from docks, boats or along the shore.

A world record-setting redear sunfish was caught on Lake Havasu on February 16, 2014 by Hector Brito, surpassing a previous record-setting redear catch on the lake by Robert Lawler in 2011. In November, 2013, a whopping 37-lb striper was also hauled out of the lake.

Hector Brito with his record-setting redear sunfish, which was 5.8 lbs, 17 in.

Want to try for a record-setting catch of your own? For information on the best bait, lures and times to fish for different species, see the tips below.

Largemouth Bass

Fish for largemouth bass in the morning in areas that will have shade cover near structures and submerged vegetation. Largemouth, for the most part, are ambush feeders and prefer live bait, but will bite on crankbaits, swimbaits and spinner baits. Best time is early morning and late afternoon hours. Bag limit 6, minimum length 13 in., any combination of largemouth and smallmouth.

Panfish

April-June is peak time to try for panfish, bluegills and redears. All bite on mealworms, nightcrawlers and lures like crappie jigs or small trout spinning lures. Bag limit 25.

Copyright 2018 Susan Stocker

Smallmouth Bass

Morning hours are the best time to catch smallmouth bass, which are especially plentiful February-April. Use lures such as craw-colored jigs, jerkbaits and small bright-colored swimbaits. Bag limit 6, minimum length 13 in., any combination of largemouth and smallmouth.

Striped Bass

Early morning and late afternoon are the best times for catching stripers, which are plentiful April-December. Try frozen bait like anchovies, mackerel or squid. The best live bait is shad or bluegills. Lures also work well, such as large swimbaits, white ratl traps and large jerkbaits like the Pointer 128. Bag limit 10, any size.

Wildlife of the Lower Colorado River Region

This stretch of the Lower Colorado River region winds between the Mojave and Sonoran deserts through two national wildlife refuges. The Havasu National Wildlife Refuge borders Lake Havasu to the north and encompasses 37,515 acres (one acre is slightly larger than one football field). The Bill Williams River National Wildlife Refuge lies to the south of Lake Havasu, near Parker Dam, and includes 6,100 acres.

The Havasu Refuge sits in the migratory flight path of birds and also includes a 20-mile stretch of one of the last undeveloped sections of the Lower Colorado River: Topock Gorge. The Bill Williams Refuge is one of the last locations to find native cottonwood and willow forests in this area.

The refuges allow this stretch to welcome more than:

- 355 species of birds, including the rarely seen bald eagle, endangered southwestern willow flycatcher, as well as the osprey, prairie falcon and Yuma clapper rail.
- 192 aquatic species, including 23 species of dragonflies
- 57 species of mammals, including beavers, bats, bobcats, mountain lions, bighorn sheep, javelina and burros
- 40 species of butterflies, including the Common Buckeye and Pygmy Blue
- 41 reptiles and amphibians, including rattlesnakes and desert tortoise

Birdwatching

Numerous bird species are found in and around Lake Havasu City, especially near the shoreline, within the many coves of Lake Havasu and along the adjacent sections of the Lower Colorado River.

Some of the species in the area include:

- Anna's Hummingbird
- Great Blue Heron
- Great Horned Owl
- Vermillion Flycatcher
- Costa's Hummingbird
- Great Egret
- Western Grebe
- Lesser Black-Billed Gull

The Bill Williams Refuge is located 23 miles south of Lake Havasu City. In 2011, it was designated as an Audubon Society Globally Significant Important Bird Area due to the spotting of a rare Nutting's Flycatcher.

London Bridge

The London Bridge is Arizona's second most popular attraction. It was designed in 1799 by Scottish engineer John Rennie and opened in 1831, spanning the River Thames in London, England.

By 1924, it was evident that the bridge was sinking, as it had not been designed to withstand the impact of 20th century automotive traffic. In 1967, the City of London placed the bridge up for sale.

On April 18, 1968, the winning bid went to Lake Havasu City founder Robert McCulloch for $2,460,000. Each block was meticulously numbered before the bridge was disassembled. The 130,000 tons of granite blocks were then shipped overseas to California and trucked to Lake Havasu City, where the bridge was reconstructed and rededicated in a ceremony on October 10, 1971.

Want to learn more? The Visitor Information Center conducts a 90-minute walking tour of the bridge. See the strafing scars from WWII on the bridge's granite surface, walk beneath its arches and stroll over the sparkling Bridgewater Channel.

Call the Visitor Information Center for tour information at 928.855.5655.

Want to see the bridge now? Check out the London Bridge webcam at GoLakeHavasu.com to see live video of the bridge, Bridgewater Channel and the English Village.

The London Bridge is rumored to be haunted! For years, visitors have sighted the figures of a British police bobby and a woman in black.
